Kundera writes of political representations in Europe of its disaffected European youth in the 1970s. “In all of Western Europe today, the same form of smiling unity, smiling confidence, smiling peace, smiles like a row of teeth, smiles like young girls on the cover of a popular magazine, smiles on which the entire edifice of community rests,” he wrote. The sequence of that sentence is a parody of the parade of post-World War II smiles, featuring West German Chancellor Willy
